Colonial house design is typified by well proportioned, symmetrical and simply detailed architectural elements. Heart or diamonds were common brick maker's marks in Maitland. Windows were protected by cedar shutters, usually painted white or green. Cellars often constructed to stop damp from rising into walls, often used as store rooms or cool rooms.

External brick was often painted with a lime based white wash. Balconies were typically fenced with miniature wooden balusters. Kitchens and wash houses were detached from the main house. Verandahs usually had a brick or stone base with thick sandstone flagging in random course width, and underside lined with lath and plaster or wide beaded boards.

Early Victorian House Design 1850 – 1860

Cumberland Street, East Maitland

Simply styled cottages with plain rectangular, symmetrical facades, central front door and commonly shuttered windows.

Fan lights above front doors which were typically four panelled.

Timber verandah boards generally 120-140mm wide.

Stone or timber verandah flooring.

Gable roofs.

Rendered brick sills.

Windows formed of small panes of glass

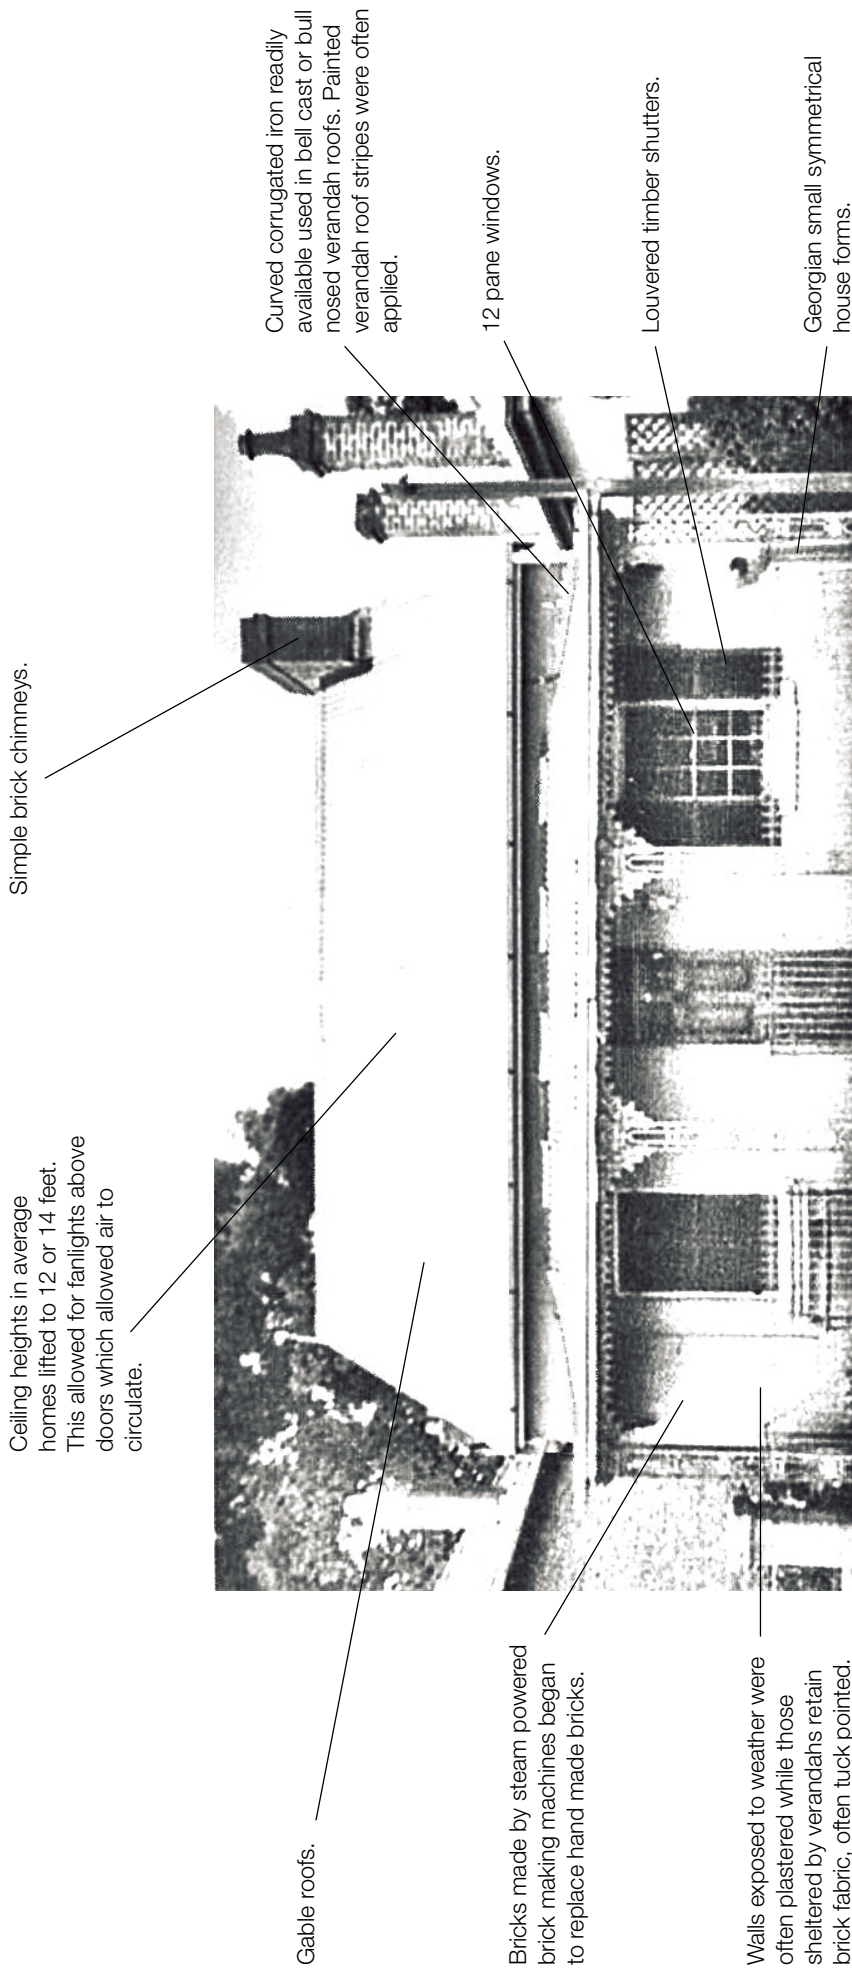

Simple original timber detailed verandahs were often replaced and modernised with more ornate cast iron.

Brick steps.

Early Victorian wall colours ranged from light creams and beiges, to strong colours such as terracotta and mid browns. Outer walls were sometimes scribed to resemble large blocks of stone. Bricks were often made more waterproof by rendering with lime plaster.

Mid – Victorian House Design 1860 – 1870

Bourke Street, Maitland

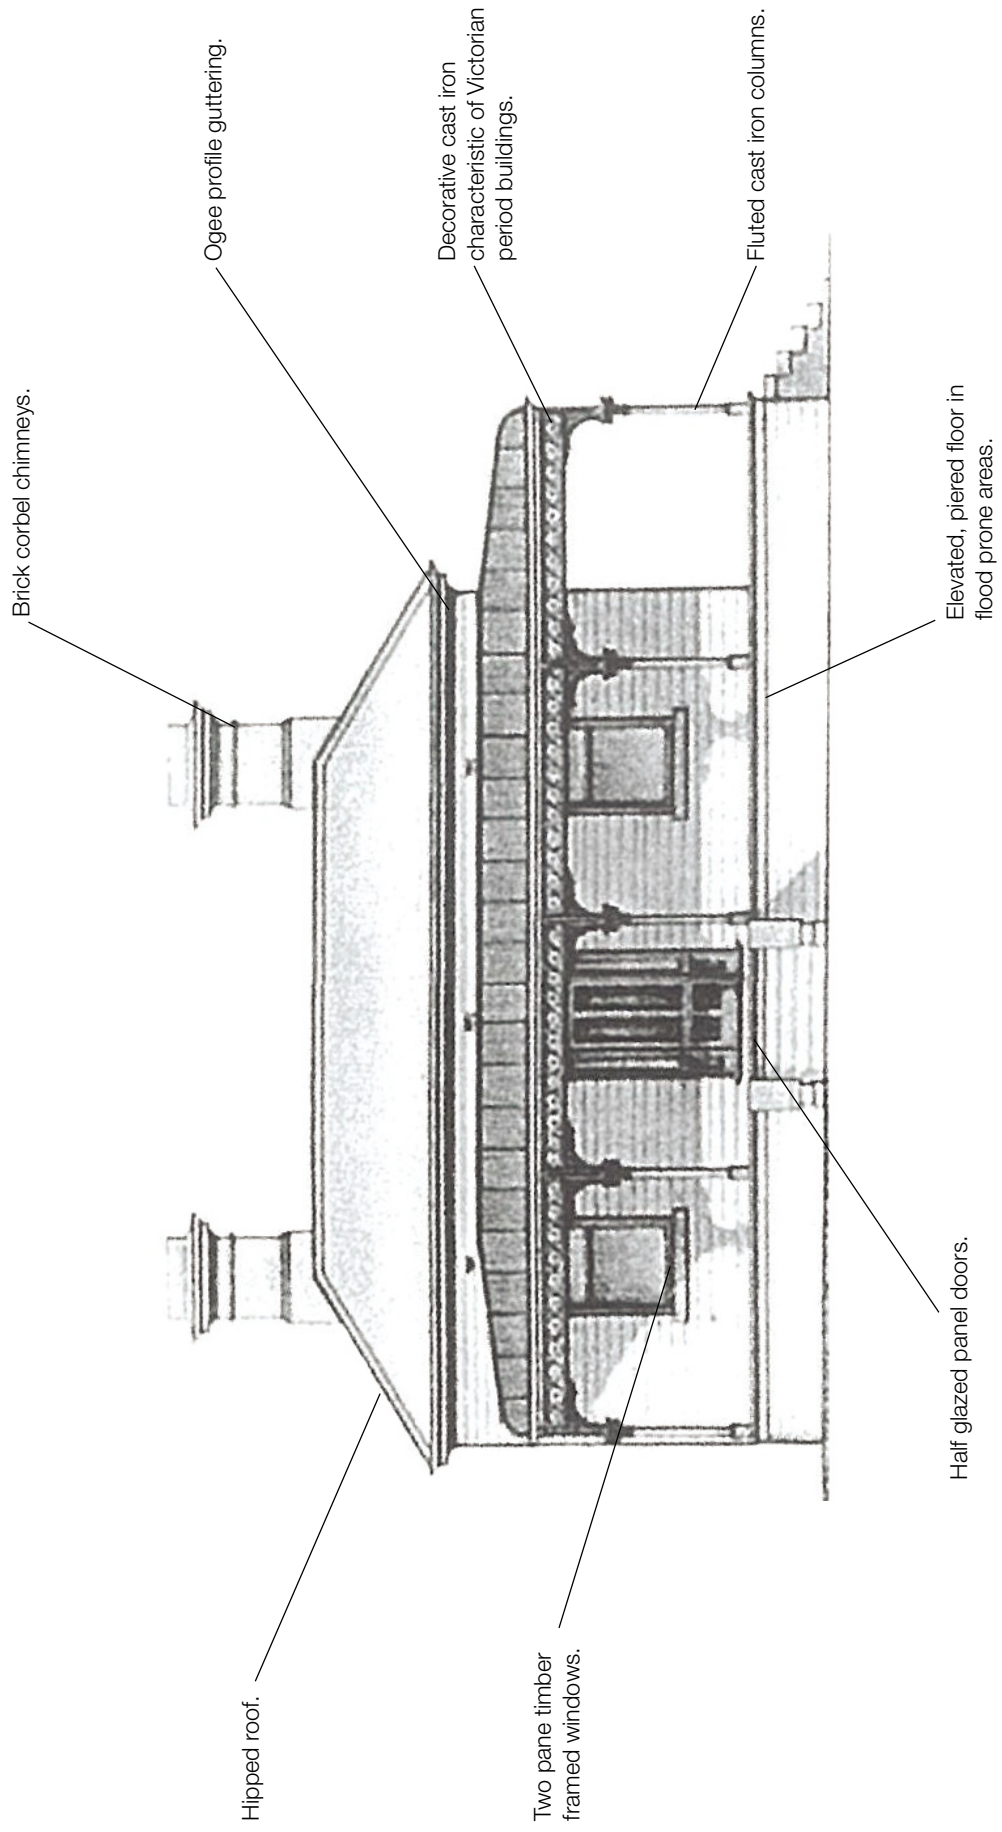

In Mid – Victorian houses, exposed outer walls were often rendered with lime mortar and sand, the mortar incorporating plaster, and later cement. Cast iron appeared as a new material used for panels and friezes.

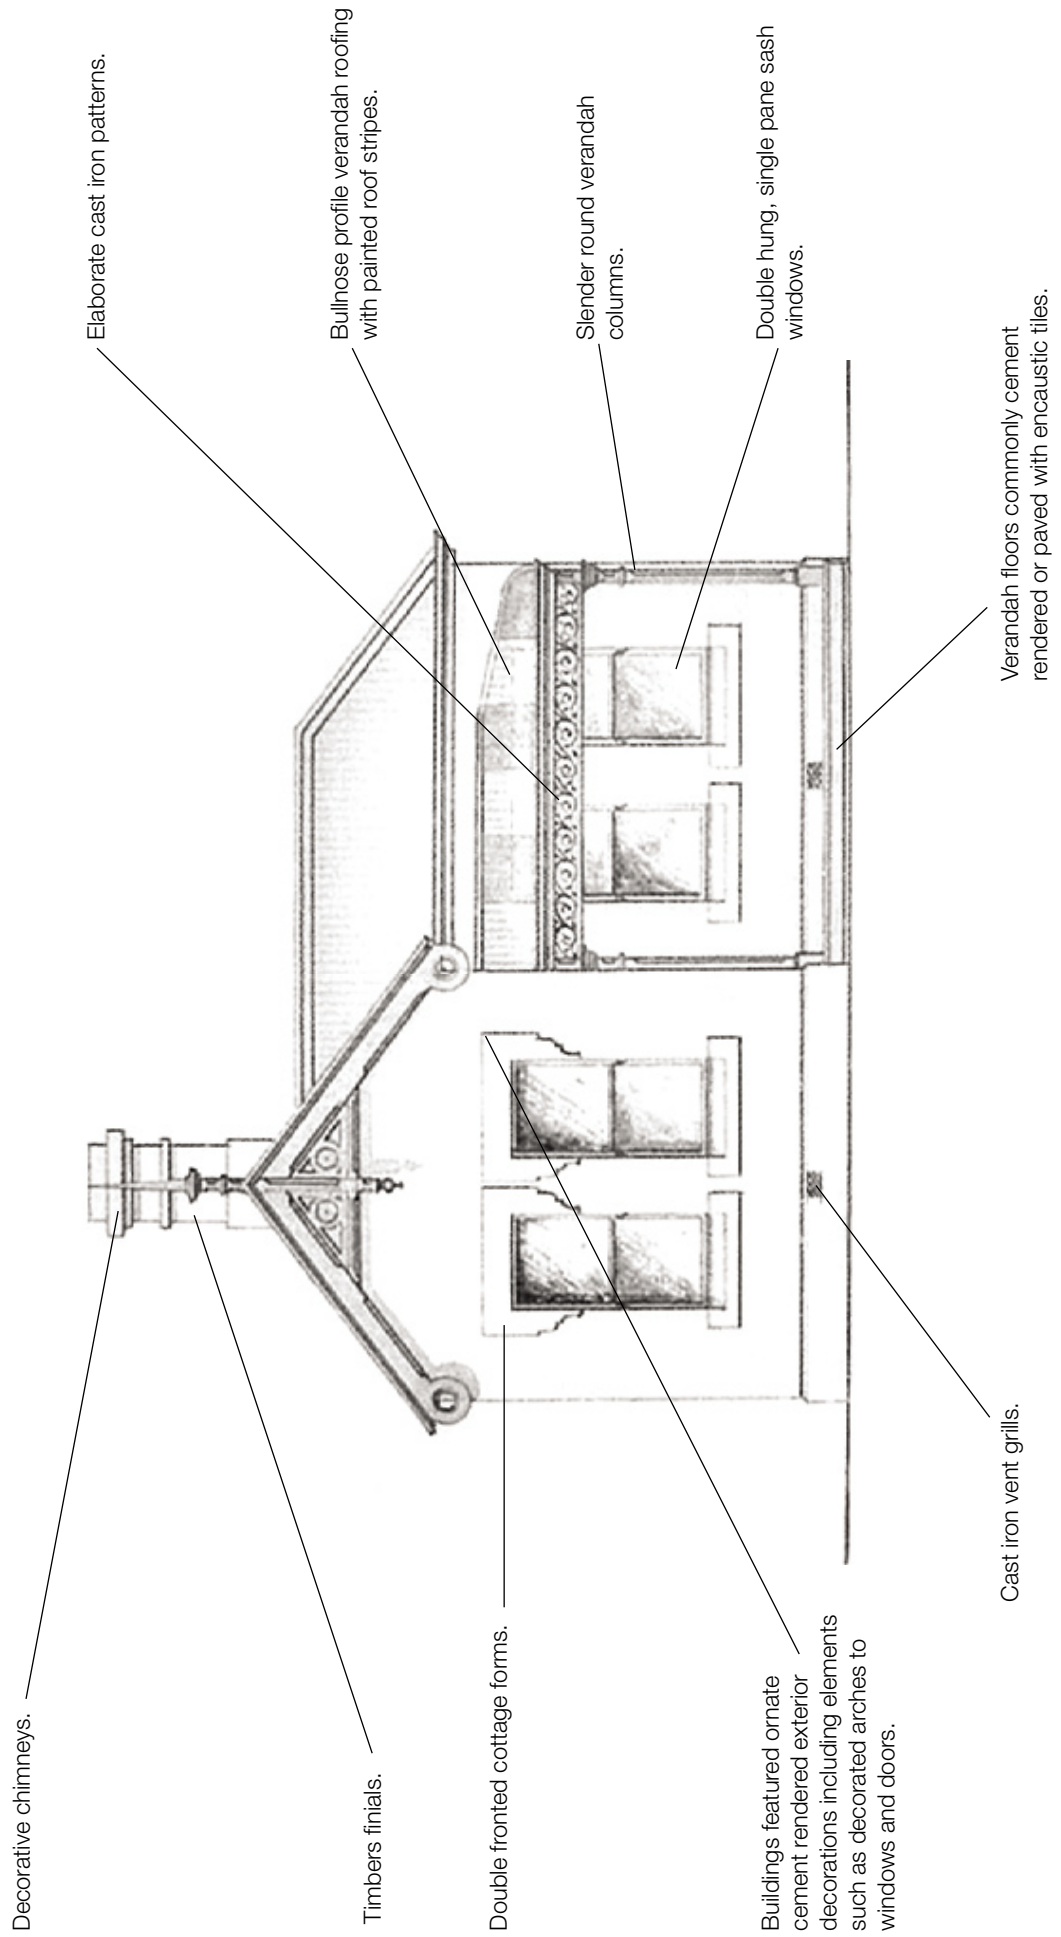

New brick firing methods allowed more colour variation in bricks which led to more decorative uses. Multi – coloured brick work was popular. Portland cement introduced, and was adopted for block footings that formed a level bed for brick foundations. Building homes on brick or timber piers was another advance, particularly in flood prone areas.
